Word From The Front

From a letter written by one of the Clareisholm boys while in Valerette. "At last the rains seem to have cleared away and we may have some fair weather before we sail for England. The ground, owing to its sandy quality does not suck as the soil in Alberta. It does not take long for the place to assume a quite comfortable aspect."

Frequent tests are given the lake water from which we get our supply and the food is very good indeed for soldiers here. Clothing has been given us as quickly as possible but even yet we have not a complete outfit and perhaps we will have to do our own thing as we are furnished with the whole uniform.

The drill has been very strict and quite different to that of our under-arms in the summer training camps. When we are through at night and free from all camp duties we go out one to bed and it seems a very short time before we have to pile out and feed the horses their breakfast.

We take a half hour walk in the other lines once in a while and very rarely we meet some old acquaintances.

We received word to night to prepare for the trip to Quebec preparatory to enlisting for the final campaign. Luckily I am slated to go on the train while our friend Byron will ride in on horseback without saddle and leading four other horses.

The rains has started again and this will not improve the road to Quebec. We received our last mail here and will probably receive the next before sailing. The little remembrances together with the letters and papers received from Clareisholm friends have been very much appreciated especially those tokens which remind us of the good cooks in Alberta.

Well I must close, kindest regards to all friends in Clareisholm.

Yours sincerely,
Dad Munro.

To win fame at chicken shooting one must be a good shot, have a good imagination, require patience and be a good liar. See who gets the most chickens in Clareisholm.

THE MENACING SEA

It Threatens to Some Day Engulf New York and Boston.

In Time, Thousands of Years, Perhaps, the Atlantic Ocean, According to Geologists, Will Flow Over the Cities That Now Tower Above Its Shores.

Geologists have long recognized the fact that the Atlantic coast line was once farther out than it is now. There is a line from the coast line, on the present coast at which the water and debris are deposited. On the left, the debris is generally about 20 feet deep. Then it becomes suddenly and becomes thin as it is to the ocean's bottom. The rest of the coast survey has traced this line throughout the length of the coast line and find it similar all along.

The geologists say that the coastline once receded out that far and that there was the ocean link, but a gradual decline from the ages has caused that line to retreat, until now it is where we stand it. In fact it is positively shown by being on land.

There is an ancient story in the Charles River, just east of Boston, that is told by those who are familiar with the river. It is the story of a man who was in the river several years ago. The story was given with reason to mean that the river was once much wider than it is now and that the river was once much wider than it is now.

The officers of the United States Navy, who are familiar with the river, say that the river was once much wider than it is now and that the river was once much wider than it is now.

HE ENFORCED THE RULE.

But in Doing It Grant Proved His Good Hearted Nature.

General Grant was a kind and warm-hearted man in spite of a certain brusqueness of manner. A story that General Logan used often to tell is to the point.

At the time General Logan was with General Grant at Holly Springs, Miss., General Forrest, the Confederate war leader, had just captured a train of supplies, and General Grant had issued an order to his men to scout the country for twenty miles round in order to get food for his troops. The country had already been swept pretty clean, and the new demands brought a good deal of hardship on the people of the neighborhood. At many of the homes there were only women, old men, children and faithful colored servants. These people, hungry and with no money to buy provisions, were often forced to go to the northern army in their distress. Food was at once given them if they would take the oath of allegiance to the United States.

One day a military carriage drove up to General Grant's headquarters, and from it alighted an elderly woman and her colored driver. The woman was admitted to the tent, and the servant stood just inside the tent flap. Only a few words were necessary to explain matters. The woman's home had been ravaged by troops, both blue and gray, and she and her servants needed food. The old colored woman spoke of her humiliation at having to beg for food, and asked that she make the request more for her servants than for herself. "I am willing to suffer everything for the south," she said, "but I can't see our people starve."

An officer who had charge of such cases told the woman that she should have food if she would take the oath of allegiance. "I cannot do that," she said. "My husband and three sons are fighting under the Confederate flag. I think you sir, for listening to me."

The woman turned to see General Grant, who had been writing at a table in one corner of the tent, slipped up from his papers. He called to the negro:

"Sam, did you ever hear of Abraham Lincoln?"

"Yassuh, general."

"Do you know that he is trying to free you colored people?"

"Yassuh, Ah knows it."

"Are you willing to take sides with Abraham Lincoln to take the oath of allegiance to the United States?"

"Yassuh, general, Ah's willin' ter do dat."

General Grant turned to the officer who had taken the woman, and said: "Administer the oath to Sam," he said, "and give him the provisions. See that he gets plenty."
